

Norsk Grotteblad nr 20, November 1988

Anus Dei

Anus Dei

or "the Art of making Cave prophesising as exciting as Cave exploring". Ulv Holbye's advocacy for digging aims at gaining recognition for this sport as equal (or superior?) to other techniques in caving. He claims that the devoted digger, for instance the British digger, develops a particular psyche as well as countenance.

For certain reasons Norway is under developed in terms of digging, reasons among which Ulv lists

- lack of pubs!

- potential for finding caves without digging!

Nevertheless, there are in fact passages that need to be cleared, such as a hole hall marked by sheep which may lead into Greftkjelen "the wrong way"! It is thus named Anus Dei.

It has so far yielded 4 m and shows all signs of being a typical dig, i.e. it is filthy, unstable, exhausting and ever extending. Ulv is about to produce a prediction about Anus Dei and the Great Breakthrough, not least designed to be used to recruit and inspire participants of the noble sport of Digging.